Decorate a ranch or a hunting lodge with this elegant framed antique watercolor. Crafted in England circa 1950, and set in a wood frame, the scene print depicts a scene featuring a group of riders on horseback, likely a royal or noble hunting party, in the lush landscape of Windsor Park. The scene is grand and formal, indicating that it might commemorate a royal event or be a depiction of a typical royal hunt. The print's title, combined with the reference to Windsor Park, a location associated with British royalty, suggests that this piece might hold historical significance, especially related to the British monarchy. The inclusion of what appears to be a royal coat of arms or crest beneath the title further emphasizes its connection to the British royal family. The bottom reads: "To Her Royal Highness The Duchess of Kent, is most respectfully dedicated by Her Royal Highness's most obedient humble Servant, R.B. Davis." This information confirms that the print depicts a royal procession or gathering in Windsor Park, specifically dedicated to the Duchess of Kent. The artist, R.B. Davis, was evidently someone who had the opportunity to work closely with or for the British royal family, as indicated by the dedication. This print is likely a historical piece, possibly from the 19th century, given the formal language and the artist's connection to Windsor Castle. The fact that it was painted at Windsor Castle and dedicated to a member of the royal family suggests that it holds some historical value, particularly for those interested in British royal history. The large colorful wall decoration is in excellent condition with wonderful details. Measures: 41.5" W x 32" H.
