This refined antique English side table was crafted circa 1880 and exemplifies the understated elegance of late 19th-century English utility furniture. Constructed from solid mahogany, the piece features a clean rectilinear form raised on tapered square legs, emphasizing balance, proportion, and functionality. The rectangular top is decorated with a delicate inlaid border, subtly framing the surface and adding a note of refinement without overpowering the restrained design. Below, three sliding trays fitted with tightly woven cane panels glide smoothly on original wooden runners and are finished with small brass ring pulls, offering both practical storage and visual texture. The mahogany retains a warm, richly developed patina with visible grain, surface wear, and minor marks consistent with age and use, enhancing the authenticity of this antique piece. The cane panels are well preserved and structurally sound. Versatile in scale and design, this antique table works beautifully as a side table, lamp table, or serving piece in a library, living room, or bedroom, and suits English country, traditional, or transitional interiors.
