Add an authentic touch of French country charm to a kitchen, wine cellar, or farmhouse interior with this beautiful antique demijohn bottle and its original-style wicker carrying basket. Crafted in France circa 1880, the traditional wine vessel features a large rounded body with gently sloping shoulders, a narrow elongated neck, and a thick rolled rim at the opening.

The hand-blown glass bottle displays a wonderful translucent pale green color, with natural bubbles, subtle ripples, and irregularities characteristic of early glassmaking techniques. The rich green tint becomes more pronounced toward the bottom, giving the vessel an attractive depth and rustic character. Traditionally used in the French countryside for storing and transporting wine, these large glass containers were commonly protected by woven wicker baskets to prevent breakage during handling and transportation.

The accompanying removable wicker basket features a rounded body, tightly woven construction, a reinforced upper rim, and two twisted handles for easy carrying. Its warm honey-brown patina complements the soft green tones of the glass beautifully.

The antique demijohn and wicker basket are in excellent condition commensurate with age and use, retaining a wonderful natural patina. Display the bottle on its own or nestled inside the basket on a kitchen counter, farmhouse table, or wine cellar shelf. A charming and versatile decorative accessory with timeless French provincial appeal.
