Handsome and full of character, this 19th-century Spanish coffee table is crafted from solid chestnut and showcases the rustic elegance of traditional Spanish Baroque design. The rectangular top, built from a single plank of richly grained wood, features beveled edges and a deep, warm patina that has developed beautifully over time. The table is supported by boldly shaped lyre-style legs with carved edges, connected by a forged iron stretcher that adds both stability and a distinctive architectural element. The hand-wrought iron rod and its patinated surface reflect authentic craftsmanship from the period. Compact and versatile in scale, this antique table works wonderfully as a coffee table, low bench, or accent piece in a living room, library, or rustic interior. In excellent condition commensurate with age and use. Surface wear, aged patina, and minor irregularities are consistent with its 19th-century origin and enhance its timeworn appeal. A timeless Spanish piece that combines form, function, and centuries-old charm. 33.25”W x 17”D x 17.25”H
