Crafted in Germany circa 1920, this handsome antique Black Forest carving set features a large carving knife and matching three-pronged fork, both fitted with natural deer antler handles. Combining rustic elegance with traditional craftsmanship, the two-piece set reflects the hunting lodge and sporting traditions associated with the Black Forest region of Germany.

Each utensil features a beautifully textured stag antler handle, retaining its natural branching points and rich brown and ivory coloration. The sculptural handles are connected to the metal implements with polished metal collars. The long carving knife features a substantial steel blade with a gently curved, pointed tip and a visible maker's stamp near the base. The matching carving fork is fitted with three elongated, slightly curved tines and a decorative shaped metal shaft.

The antique carving utensils are in excellent condition commensurate with age and use, with a wonderful aged patina on the antlers and authentic surface wear and oxidation on the metal. The set would make an attractive addition to a rustic dining room, mountain lodge, or gentleman's hunting retreat. Both functional and decorative, these traditional Black Forest pieces could also be displayed in a kitchen or alongside a collection of antique sporting accessories.
