Bring a touch of nature-inspired charm to a mantel, dining table, or console with this delightful pair of antique-style bird candelabras. Crafted circa 1960, each sculptural centerpiece is cast in iron and modeled as a naturalistic tree branch raised on twig-form feet with finely textured bark, delicate leaves, and beautifully detailed songbirds perched among the branches.

Each candelabrum features two candle sockets integrated into the branching form, creating an elegant silhouette that appears to grow organically from the tree limbs. The charming birds, realistic branches, and subtle leaf accents evoke the tranquility of a woodland setting, while the dark patinated iron finish with hints of verdigris on the leaves adds warmth, depth, and character.

Both candelabras are in excellent condition commensurate with age and use, exhibiting a rich aged patina and crisp casting details throughout. Decorative and functional, they make wonderful centerpieces for a dining table, mantel, library, or console and complement rustic, country, lodge, and traditional interiors alike.

Dimensions (each): 14”W × 9.25”D × 10”H
