This refined pair of mid-century French side tables was crafted circa 1950 and features an elegant brass metal frame with clean, architectural lines. The slender, turned legs are detailed with subtle ring accents, lending a restrained classical touch that balances the minimalist silhouette.

Each table is fitted with inset smoked glass panels on both the upper and lower tiers, creating a striking contrast between the dark reflective surfaces and the warm brass structure. The glass shows light surface wear and natural age marks consistent with use, contributing to the authentic vintage character of the pair without compromising function.

The open two-tier design offers excellent versatility, making these tables ideal as end tables, bedside tables, or accent pieces flanking a sofa or console. Their balanced proportions and understated elegance allow them to integrate seamlessly into mid-century, Hollywood Regency, or transitional interiors.

The tables are in excellent commensurate with age and use, retaining a desirable, time-softened finish throughout.
